ABSTRACT

A method and computer system for tracking kernel resource usage is disclosed that tracks kernel resources allocated to user processes called from the user level of the operating system. A tag of the user processes is generated, which allows a way to 5 identify the user processes and associate allocated kernel resources to the user process. As a result, the user processes can be charged for kernel resources.